Manitou Lake Council Meeting

Meeting of the Council of the Rural Municipality of Manitou Lake No. 442 held in the hall, Marsden Sask. on the 10th day of September, 1924.

Present: Reeve Berry; Cirs. Plewman, Lawton, Smith, Mitchell and Bradley.

Minutes: The minutes of the last meeting were read and passed on motion.

Arrangements of Taxes: Smith that the secretary write each ratepayer who is a leaseholder or a holder of unpatented land and who has arrears of taxes against said land asking that the arrears be cleared inside of 30 days from the mailing of the letter and that failing receipt inside that time the secretary proceed for the recovery of the sums either by distraint or the Small Debt Act. Carried.

Bylaw No. 51 Passed: Bylaw No. 51. A bylaw of R.M. No. 442 to restrain animals from running at large in the Hamlet of Marsden was read a third time and passed.

R. R. Crossing: The secretary was to write to the C.P.R. engineer (W. A. James) asking that the crossing east of the hamlet be made into a public crossing.

Bylaw No. 52 1st and 2nd: Bylaw No. 52. A bylaw of R.M. No. 442 to regulate the speed of automobiles in the hamlet of Munc. was read a first and a second time.

It was moved that Mr. Mitchell and the secretary act as a committee to overlook the new proposed location of the nuisance ground for the hamlet of Marsden. Carried.

Ref. W. Compensation: Moved that A. E. Marsh be paid $33.75 for 1.35 acres taken from the N. 15-45-27-3rd and that this payment cover any necessary compensation for damage. Carried.

The meeting adjourned on Motion. The next meeting to be on the 8th of October 1924, at the usual place.

NEW CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

The Southern Alberta Co-operative Association, which was recently organized in the Lethbridge-Calgary district, has now secured the necessary number of signers to their five-year produce pool contract and hope to commence operating in the near future. Some 20,000 acres of hay land, representing 25,000 tons of alfalfa and mixed hays, have been signed as well as 4,000 head of hogs and cattle and 18,000 poultry and 3,000 tons of potatoes and other produce.

Turn about is fair play—to the small boy on the merry-go-round.

E. P. Ranch Improving Western Stock

(Top)—The Prince of Wales' best grass cutters are here seen at work on his ranch at High River, Alta. They are a famous breed and include many prize winners. (Left)—Will Somers, a famous race-horse belonging to His Majesty the King, and loaned to the Prince of Wales, who is keeping him on his ranch at High River to improve the equine stock of Alberta. (Right)—King of the Follies—a senior and grand champion Short Horn bull imported and owned by the Prince of Wales and one of the many fine animals on the Prince's Ranch at High River on the Calgary-Lethbridge branch of the Canadian Pacific.

The way to approach the E.P. ranch is from Calgary to High River, 40 miles south, on the Canadian Pacific Railway. From High River one has to drive southwest a distance of 35 miles through one of the richest grain-growing and stock-raising countries in North America. In the distance the jagged peaks of the Rockies dip the clouds and below, well-wooded, are the foothills. The road cuts through the centre of the "Bar-U" ranch and about one mile and a half from the limits of the "Bar-U" the low rambling bungalow where the Prince is now living is seen through a pretty glen. It is a homelike looking place typical of many a rancher's home in "Sunny Alberta." Here his Royal Highness goes "back to the land."

The Prince of Wales has never ceased to exhibit a keen interest in his ranch, and fresh indications are periodically given of the importance he attaches to it and the work it is doing. After purchasing the ranch, and before returning to England, the Prince made arrangements for the shipment of some of the best stock in the British Isles to the Canadian West. Thoroughbred horses came from the Royal stail, Shorthorns from the King's farm, Shropshire sheep from the Duke of Wexminster's estate, and hardy Dartmoor ponies from the Devon Moors, a type of animal previously unknown in Canada. From time to time since then fresh additions of the most excellent stock have been made. The work still continues.

In an area such as Western Canada, which has for years devoted itself to the elevation of the quality of livestock and has become internationally famous for the superior type of its horses and cattle, importations must be of an outstanding distinctiveness to be worthy of special note, but this the E.P. Ranch has effected. At Alberta provincial exhibitions the animals from High River are attractive features.

In its brief history, the E.P. Ranch has come to play an important part in the Western Canadian live-stock industry, and it has done so, a little in the development of a more sympathetic understanding for Canadian agriculture in the British Isles. Its establishment was an indication of the importance attached to agriculture in the Dominions of the Empire its continuance and promotion an encouragement to the same in live-stock industry, faith in the future, and a stimulus to the attainment of perfection in breeding.

There is a use for everything—unkind gossip excepted.

BRITISH BOYS ANXIOUS TO COME OUT

Under the scheme recently inaugurated by Hon. Geo. Hoadley, Minister of Agriculture, with the overseas settlement board, whereby British young men are to come to Alberta for special work at the Vermilion School of Agriculture, with a view later to placing them on farms, some 50 applications have already been received by the settlement board in London. Although the stipulation was that not less than 100 were to be sent out in the first party, application has been made to the department in Edmonton to have the fifty young men sent out at once to commence their training.

Our Short Story

ONCE AT THE RED MAN'S RIVER

"It's got to be settled to-night. Nance. This game is up here, up there. The redcoat police from Ottawa are coming, and they'll soon be roostin' in this post, the Injuns are going, the buffaloes are most gone, and the fur traders' dead in these parts. D'ye see?"

The woman did not answer the big broad-shouldered man bending over her, but remained looking into the fire with wide, abstracted eyes, and a face somewhat set.

"You and your brother Bantry's got to go. This store ain't worth a cent now. The Hudson's Bay Company'll come along with the redcoats, and they'll set up a nice Sunday-school business here for what they call agricultural settlers. There'll be a railway, and the Yankees'll send up their marshals to watch with the redcoats on the border, and—"

"And the days of smuggling will be over," put in the girl, in a low voice. "No more bull-whackers and skinners whooping it up, no more Blackfoot and Piegans drinking alcohol and water, and cutting one another throats. A nice, quiet time coming on the border, Abe, eh?"

The man looked at her queerly. She was not prone to sarcasm, she had not been given to sentimentalism in the past; she had taken the border life as it was, had looked it straight in the eyes. She had lived up to it, or down to it, without any fuss, as good as any man in any phase, of the life, and the only white woman in this whole Westcountry. It was not in the words, but in the true, that Abe Hawley found something unusual and defamatory.

"Why gosh darn it, Nance. what's got into you? You bin a man out on the border. But now you don't sound friendly to what's been the game out here, and to all of us that've been risking our lives to get a livin'."

"What did I say?", asked the girl unmoved.

"Ain't what you said, it's the sound of your voice."

"You don't know my voice, Abe it ain't always the same. You ain't always about; you don't always hear it."

He caught her arm suddenly. "No, but I want to hear it always. I want to be always where you are. Nance. That's what's got to be settled to-night."

"Oh, it's got to be settled to-night!" said the girl, meditatively, kicking nervously at a log on the fire. "It takes two to settle a thing like that and there's only one says it's got to be settled. Maybe it takes more than two—or three—to settle a thing like that. Now she laughed mirthlessly.

The man started, and his face flushed with anger; then he put a hand on himself, drew astep back and watched her.

"One can settle a thing, if there's a loen in it. You see, Nance, you and Bantry've got to close out. It's fixing it up to-night over at Dignan's Drive, and you can't go to sleep alone when you quit this place. Now, it's this way you can go West with me. Away North there's Buffalo and deer, and game aplenty, up along the Saskatchewan, and farther up on the Peace River. It's going to be all right up there for half a lifetime, and we can have it in our way yet. There'll be no smuggling but there'll be trading, and land to get and mebbe, there'd be no need of smuggling, for we can make it I know—good white whiskey—and we'll still have free life for our own. I can't make up my mind to settle down to a clean collar and going to church on Sundays, and all that. And the West's in your bones, too. You look like the West."

The girl's face brightened with pleasure, and she gazed at him steadily.

"You got its beauty and its freshness, and you got its heat and cold—" She saw the tobacco-juice stain at the corners of his mouth, she became conscious of the slight odor of spirits in the air, and the light in her face lowered in intensity.

"You got the ways of the deer in your walk, the song of the birds in your voice; and you're going north with me, Nance, for I bin talkin' to you steady four years. It's a long time to wait on the chance, for there's always women to be got to same as other have done. Knew like Dignan with his girls, and men like Tobey with his half-breeds. But I ain't bin lookin' that way I bin lookin' only toward you." He laughed eagerly, and lifted a tin cup of whiskey standing on a table near. "I bin lookin' toward you now, Nance. Your health and mine together. It's got to be settled now. You got to go to the 'Gin. Cast with Bantry, or north with me."

The girl jerked a shoulder and frowned a little. He seemed so sure of himself.

"Or South with Nick Pringle, or East with some one else," she said quizzically. "There's always four quarters to the compass, even when Abe Hawley thinks he owns the world and has a mortgage on eternity. I'm not going West with Bantry but there's three other points that's open."

With an oath the man caught her by the shoulders, and swung her round to face him. He was swelling with anger. "You—Nick Pringle, that trading cheat, that gambler! After four years, I'm not to my shoulders," she said, quietly. "I'm not your property, Go and get some Piegian girl to bully. Keep your hands off. I'm not a bronco for you to bit and bridle. You've got no rights. You—" Suddenly she relented, seeing the look in his face, and realizing that, after all, it was a tribute to herself that she could keep him for four years and rouse him to such fury.

"But yes, Abe," she added, "you have some rights. We've been good friends all these years, and you've been all right out here. You said some nice things about me just now, and I liked it, even if it was as if you'd poured it out of a book. I've got no learnin' in I'm plain honest. I'm a sapling, I'm not any prairie flower, but I like when I like, and I like a lot when I like. I'm a bit of hickory, I'm not a prairie flower—"

"Who said you was a prairie flower? Did I? Who's talking about prairie flowers?"

He stopped suddenly, turned round at the sound of a footstep behind him and saw standing in a doorway leading to another room, a man who was digging his knuckles into his eyes and stifling a yawn. He was a refined-looking stripling of not more than twenty-four, not tall, but well-made, and with an air of breeding, intensified rather than hidden by his rough clothes.

"Je-rickey!" How long have slept he said, blinking at the two beside the fire. "How long?" he added with a "I said I'd wake you," said the girl, coming forward. "You needn't have worried."

"I don't worry," answered the young man. "I dreamed myself awake I suppose. I go dreamin' of redcoats and U. S. marshals and an ambush in the Barleuf Coulee, and—" He saw a secret, warning gesture from the girl and laughed, then turned to Abe and looked him in the face. "Oh, I know him! Abe Hawley's all O. K.—I've seen him over at Dignan's Drive, or among rogues. We're all in it. How goes it—all right?" he added, carelessly, to Hawley, and took a step forward, as though to shake hands. Seeing the forbidding look by which he was met, however he turned to the girl, again, as Hawley muttered something they could not hear.

"What time is it?" he asked.

"It's nine o'clock," answered the girl her eyes watching his every movement, her face alive.

"Then the moon's up almost?"

"I'll be up in an hour."

"Je-rickey! Then I've got to get ready." He turned to the other room again and entered.

"College pup!" said Hawley, under his breath, savagely. "Why didn't you tell me he was here?"

"Was it any of your business, Abe?"

He rejoined fiercely.

"Hiding him away from—"

"Hiding? Who's been hiding him? He's doing what you've done. He's smuggling—the last lot for the traders over by Dignan's Drive. He'll get it there by morning. He has as much right here as you. What's got into you, Abe?"

"What does he know about the business? Why, he's a college man from the East. I've heard o' him Aint got no more sense for this life than a dickie-bird. White-faced college pup! What's he doing out here? If you're a friend o' his, you'd better look after him, he's green."

"He's going East again, she said,

"and if I don't go west with Bantry, or South over to Montana with Nick Pringle or North—"

"Nance!" His eyes burned, his lips quivered.

She looked at him and wandered at the power she had over this bulky of the border, who had his own way with most people, and was one of the most daring fighters, hunters, and smugglers in the country. He was cool, hard, and well in hand in his daily life and yet, where she was concerned, went all to pieces," as some one else had said about himself to her.

She was not without the wiles and tact of her sex. You go now, and come back, Abe," he said, in a soft voice, Come back in an hour. Come back then, and I'll tell you which way I'm going from here."

He was alright again. "It's with you Nance," he said, eagerly. "I bin waiting four years."

As he closed the door behind him the "college pup" entered the room again. "Oh, Abe's gone!" he said, excitedly. "I hoped you'd get rid of the old rip-roarer. I wanted to be alone with you for a while. I don't really need to start yet. With the full moon I can do it before daylight." Then, with quick warmth, "Ah Nance, Nance, you're a flower—the flower of all the prairies," he added, catching her hand and laughing into her eyes.

She flushed, and for a moment seemed almost bewildered. His boldness, joined to an air of immaturity and understanding, had influenced her greatly from the first moment they had two months ago, as he was going South on his smuggling enterprise—The easy way in which he had talked to her, the extraordinary sense he seemed to have of what was going on in her mind, the confidential meaning in voice and tone and words, had given, opened up a side of her nature hitherto unexplored. He had talked him freely then, for it was only when he left her that she had what he instinctively knew she would remember till they met again. His quick comments, his indirect but acute questions, his exciting and alluring reminiscences of the East, his subtle yet seeming frank compliments, had only stimulated a new rapacity in her evoked comparisons of this delicate-looking, fine-faced gentleman with the men of the west by whom she was surrounded. But later he appeared to stumble into expressions of admiration for her, as though he was carried of his feet and had been stumped by her charm. He had done it all like a master. He had not said that she was beautiful—she knew she was not—but that she was wonderful and fascinating, and with 'something about her' he had never seen in all his life like her own prairies, thrilling inspiring, and adorable.

His first look at her had seemed full of amazement. She had noticed that, and thought it meant only that he was surprised to find a white girl there among smugglers, hunters, squawmen, and Indians. But he said that the first look at her made him feel things, feel life and women different from ever before; and he had never seen anyone like her, nor a face with so much in it. It was all very brilliantly done.

"You make me want to live," he had said, and she, with no knowledge of the nuance of language, had taken it literally, and had asked him if it had been his wish to die; and he had responded to her mistaken interpretation of his meaning, saying that he had not wanted to live. As he said it his face looked, in truth, overcome by some deep, inward care; so that there came a sort of feeling she had never had so far for any man—that he ought to have some one to look after him. This was the first real stirring of the maternal and protective spirit in her toward men, though it had shown itself amply enough regarding animals and birds. He had said she had not wanted to live, and yet he had come out West in order to try and live, to cure the trouble that had started in his lungs. The eastern doctors had told him that the rough outdoor life would cure him or nothing would, and he had vanished from the college walls and the pleasant purloins of learning and fashion into the wilds. He had not lied directly to her when he said that he had had deep trouble; but he had given the impression that he was suffering from wrongs which had broken his spirit and ruined his health. Wronged there certainly had been in his life, by whomever committed.

Two months ago he had left this girl with her mind full of memories of what he had said to her, and there was something in the sound of the slight cough following his farewell words, which had haunted her ever since. Her tremendous health and energy, the fire of life burning so brightly in her, reached out toward this man living on so narrow a margin force with just enough for each day's use and no more. Four hours before he had come again with his team of four mules, and an Indian youth, having covered forty miles since his last stage. She was at the door, and saw him coming while he was yet a long distance off. Some instinct had told her to watch that afternoon for the news of his intended return and of his dangerous enterprise. The Indians had trailed south and east, the traders had disappeared with them, her brother Bantry had gone up and over to Dignan's Drive and save for a few loners and last hangers-on, she was alone with what must soon be a deserted post; it walls, its great enclosed yard and its gun-platforms (for it had been fortified) left for law and order to enter upon, in the persons of the red-coated watchman of the law.

Out of the South, from over the border, bringing the last great smuggled load of whiskey which was to be hand ed over at Dignan's Drive, and then floated on the Red Man's River to settlements up North came the "college pup", Kelly Lambert, worn out, dazed with fatigue, but smiling, too, for a woman's face was ever a tonic to his blood since he was big enough to move in life for himself. It needed courage—or recklessness—to run the border now; for, as Abe Hawley had the American marshals were on the pounce, the red-coated mounted police

St. Jovite in the mountains of Northern Quebec is famous summer resort. Winter times they use a wingless aeroplane for sky-riding, but in summer they put the wings and a body on and use it for fishing and swimming. Behind almost every mountain of the Laurentians there is a lake or two—so the plane comes in handy for jumping over the hills to chase the sporting bass and trout to their lairs. The above pretty girl, one of a party of five, has just come in from a flying trip to a nearby lake and is justly proud of her attire of speckled beauties.

Editorial Comment

Quarantine conditions are legally effective from the moment they are imposed by the order of the Medical Officer of Health. From this time until the arrival of the quarantine cards it is the duty of those within the quarantined premises to obey the regulations, and to exercise all care and precaution within their power to prevent violations of quarantine by those who may visit the premises.

The card is supplied with the object of warning visitors and saving unnecessary trouble for those within quarantined premises but from the moral and the legal viewpoint the quarantine is in force, even when by force of circumstances the card cannot be supplied at the first.

OUR YESTERDAYS

Time knows but one movement—eternally forward. No power of God or man can turn time backwards or stop it and give us another chance to see our yesterdays.

Our yesterdays are as gone as summer's flowers. Unlike the flowers, they have no seed, no roots, no means of reproduction that they or their kind may return to us. Our yesterdays are gone—gone forever and it is useless to stand at their grave and lament, and wish them back. They are gone with their opportunities, their hopes, their aspirations, and the good or evil of our yesterdays may live on and on because the power of these things died not with them.

If we squandered our yesterdays, we will some day face the record with regret. If the life to come is progressive as is the life here, we will lament that our yesterdays were put to no noble purpose. Whether or not there will be a hell when we pass to where we shall know as we are known, we will experience that same despair over our wasted yesterdays that we often feel now when we long for schooldays that are forever gone.

Each succeeding year should find us advancing. If not we are practically wasting the time that has been allotted to us. If nothing else we should be able to say like Longfellow: "Some thing accomplished, something done to earn a night's repose."

"Here's something like a cigar Have one!"
"Yes, It's something like one. What is it?"

New Assessments Are Completed

The new assessment of the lands in the municipalities of Merton and Ribstone have now been completed. This assessment which will stand for five years, 1925-1929, takes into account the land without improvements. The value is based upon the proportion of arable, pasture and hay lands. Allowances are made for distance from nearest elevator and school facilities.

Opportunities will be given to hear appeals at courts of revision, but appellants are requested to bear in mind the foregoing facts, together with the fact that improvements upon the land are not included in the assessment.

Tax Collections Are Improving

In reply to our enquiries at the Municipal office we are informed that there has been a sixty per cent improvement in the collections of taxes as against last year. During 1923 225 distraints for taxes were issued but during the current year it has only been necessary to issue 86.

NOT INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Post Mortem Shows Cause Of Death

(from Edmonton Journal)
That the deaths at Islay of little Shirley Drake and his sister, Mrs. Christenson, which were reported last Saturday were not due to infantile paralysis is the information received by the Journal in a letter from the bereaved mother, Mrs. Florence Drake, who writes, calling attention to a news item dated from Chauvin in the Journal in which it was said that this disease was the cause of the demise of both.

In the case of Mrs. Christenson the attending physician was not sure whether the cause of death was infantile paralysis or spinal meningitis. Mrs. Drake writes, and so he performed a post-mortem which revealed in abcess on the brain around a dent in the skull which was caused by a fall from a wagon seven years ago, but which had not shown any ill effects at the time.

The death of the little boy, says Mrs. Drake, was the immediate result of pneumonia, which came upon him following two months' illness and a serious operation when he was in a weakened condition.

Reports which were current in the district that the dread disease of infantile paralysis had been transmitted by a kiss are given an emphatic denial by Mrs. Drake, who says that neither she or her daughter had kissed the dead boy.

were coming west from Ottawa, and word had winged its way along the prairie that these redcoats were only a few score miles away and might be at Fort Stay-Awhile at any moment, the trail to Dingoan's Drive lay past Through Barleuf Coulee, athwart a great, open stretch of country, along a wooded belt, and then, suddenly over a ridge, Dingoan's Drive and Red Man's River would be reached.

The Government had a mind to make an example, if necessary, by killing some smugglers in conflict, and the United States marshals had been goaded by vanity and anger at one or two escapes to have something for their money," as they said. That, in their language, meant, "to let the red run," and Kelly Lambert had none too much blood to lose.

He looked very pale and beaten as he held Nance Macchell's hands now, and called her a prairie flower, as he had done when he left her two months before. On his arrival, but now he said little for he saw that she was glad to see him, and he was dead for sleep after thirty-six hours of ceaseless travel and watching and danger. Now with the most perilous part of his journey still before him, and worn physically as he was, his blood was running faster as he looked into the girl's face, and bounding life drew him to her. Such vitality in a man like Abe Hawley would have angered him almost, as it did a little time ago, when Abe was there, but possessed by the girl, it roused in him a hunger to draw from the well of her perfect beauty, from the unused vigor of her being, something for himself. The touch of her hair, and him. In the fullness of her life, in the strong eloquence of face and form, he forgot she was not beautiful. The lightness passed from his words, and his face became eager.

"Flower, yes, the flower of the life of the west—that's what I mean," he said. "You are like an army marching. When I look at you, my blood runs faster. I want to march too. When I hold your hand I feel that life's worth living—I want to do things."

She drew her hand away rather awkwardly. She had not now that command of herself which had ever been easy with the men of the west, except, perhaps, with Abe Hawley when

But, with an attempt, only half-moment, to turn the topic, she said: "You must be starting if you want to get through to-night. If the redcoats catch you this side of Barleuf Coulee, or in the Coulee itself, you'll stand no chance. I heard they were only thirty miles from this afternoon. Maybe they'll come straight on here to-night, instead of camping. If they have news of your coming, they might. "You can never."

"You're right," he caught her hand again. "I've got to be going now. But Nance—Nance—Nance, I want to stay here, with you; or to take you with me."

She drew back. "What do you mean she asked. "Take me with you—where?"

"East—away down East."

His brain thrilled, her pulses beat so hard she scarcely knew what to say, did not know what she said. "Why do you do this kind of thing?" "Why do you smuggle?" she asked. "You want brought up to this."

"To get this load of stuff through a life and death to me he answered. "I have made six thousand dollars out here. That's enough to start me again in the East, where I lost everything. But I've got to have six hundred dollars clear for the travel—railways and things, and I'm having this last run to get it. My health's better; the lung is closed up. I've only got a little cough now and again, and I'm off East. I don't want to go alone." He suddenly caught her in his arms. "I want you— you, to go with me, Nance Nance!"

Her brain swam. To leave the West behind, to go East to a new life full of pleasant things as this man's wife; her great heart rose, and suddenly the mother in her as well as the woman in her was captured by his wooing. She had never known what it was to be wooed like this.

She was about to answer when there came a sharp knock at the door leading from the back yard, and Lambert's Indian lad entered. "The soldier he come—many. I go over the ridge I see. They come quick here," he said.

Nance gave a startled cry, and Lambert turned to the other room for his pistols, overcoat, and cap, when there was the sound of horses' hoofs, the door suddenly opened, and an officer stepped inside.

"You're wanted for smuggling Lambert," he said brusquely. "Don't stir!" In his hand was a revolver. "Oh, hosh! Prove it," answered the young man, pale and startled, but cool in speech and action.

"We'll prove it all right. The stuff is hereabouts."

The girl said something to the officer in the Chinook language she saw he did not understand. Then she spoke quickly to Lambert in the same tongue.

"Keep him here a bit," she said. "His men haven't come yet. Your outfit is well hid. I'll see if I can get away with it before they find it. They'll follow and bring you with them, that's sure. So if I have luck and get through we'll meet at Dingoan's Drive."

Lambert's face brightened. He quickly gave her a few dretions in Chinook, and told her what to do at Dingoan's if she got there first. Then she was gone.

The officer did not understand what Nance had said, but he realized that whatever she intended to do she had an advantage over him. With an unnecessary courage he had ridden on alone to make his capture, and as it proved, without success. He had got his man, but he had not got the smuggled whiskey and alcohol he had come to seize. There was no time to be lost. The girl had gone before he realized it. What had she said to the prisoner? He was foolish enough to ask Lambert, and Lambert replied coolly: "She said she'd get you some supper, but she guessed it would have to be cold—What's your name? Are you a colonel, or a captain, or only a principal private?"

"I am Captain MacFee; Lambert, you'll now bring me where your outfit is March!"

The pistol was still in his hand, and he had a determined look in his eye. Lambert saw it. He was aware of how much power lay in the threatening face before him, and how eager that power was to use itself, and provide "Examples"; but he took his chances.

"I'll march all right," he answered; "but I'll march to where you tell me. You can't have it both ways. You can take me because you've found me, and you can take my outfit too, when you've found it; but I'm not doing your work, nor if I know it."

"There was a blaze of anger in the eyes of the officer, and it looked for an instant as though something of the lawlessness of the border was going to mark the first step of the Law in the Wilderness, but he bethought himself in time, and said, quietly, yet in a voice which Lambert knew he must heed:

"But on your things—quick."

When this was accomplished, and MacFee had secured the smuggler's pistols, he said again "March Lambert!"

Lambert marched through the moonlight night toward the troop of men who had come to set up the flag of order in the plains and hills, and as he went his keen ear heard his own mules galloping away down to ward the Barleuf Coulee. His heart thumped in his breast. This girl, this prairie flower, was doing this for him, was risking her life, was breaking the law for him. If she got through, and handed over the whiskey to those who were waiting for it and it got bundled into the boats going North, the redcoats would reach Dingoan's Drive, it would be as fine a performance as the west had ever seen; and he would be six hundred dollars to the good. He listened to the mules galloping, till the sounds died into the distance, but he saw now that his captor had heard too, and that the pursuit would be desperate.

They had not gone a dozen miles when a shouting horsemanship rode furiously on them from behind. They turned their carbines cocked, but it was Abe Hawley who cursed them, flung his fingers in their faces, and rode on harder and harder. Abe had had the news from one Nancy's half-breeds, and with the devil raging in his heart, had entered on the chase. His spirit was up against them all. Against Law represented by the troopers came the Force of Stay-Awhile against the troopers and their captain speeding after Nancy Macchell—his Nance, who was risking her life and freedom for the hated, pale-faced smuggler riding between the troopers and his spirit was against Nance herself.

Nance had said to him, "Come back in an hour," and he had come back to find her gone. She had broken her word. She had deceived him. She had thrown the four years of his waiting to the winds, and a savage lust was in his heart, which would not be appeased till he had done some evil thing to some one.

The girl and the Indian lad were pounding through the night with ears strained to listen for hoofbeats coming after, while MacFee searched forward into the trail for swollen creeks and difficult obstructions. Through Barleuf Coulee it was a terrible march, for there was no road, and again and again they were nearly overturned, while wolves hovered in their path, ready to reap a midnight harvest. But in the open again with the full moonlight on their trail, the girl's spirits rose.

If she could do this thing for the man who looked into her eyes as no one had ever done, what a finish to her days in the West! For they were finished, finished forever, and she was going—she was going East; not West with Bantry, nor South with Nick Pringle, nor North with Abe Hawley, she had been a good woman, he had a great heart, he was the best man of all the Western men she had known; but another man had come from the East, a man who had roused something in her never felt before, a man who had said she was wonderful; and he needed some one to take good care of him, to make him love life again. Abe would have been all right if Lambert had never come, and she had meant to marry him in the end; but it was different now, and she must get over it. Yet she had told Abe to come back in an hour. He was sure to do it; and when he had done it, and found her gone on this errand, what would he do? She knew what he would do. He would hurt some one. He would follow too. But at Dingoan's Drive, if he reached it before the troopers came before Abe, and did the thing she had set out to do; and because no whiskey could be found, Lambert must go free, and they all stood there together, what would be the end? Abe would be terrible, but she was going East, not North, and when the time came she would face it and put things right somehow.

The night seemed endless to her fixed and anxious eyes and mind, yet dawn came, and there had fallen no sound of hoofbeats on her car. The ridge above Dingoan's Drive was reached and covered, but yet there was no sign of her pursuers. At Red Man's River she delivered her load of contraband to the traders waiting for it, and saw it loaded into the boats and disappear beyond the wooded bend above Dingoan's.

Then she collapsed into the arms of her brother Bantry, and was carried, fainting, into Linyan's Lodge. A half-hour later MacFee and his troopers and Lambert came MacFee grimly searched the post and the shore but he saw by the looks of all that he had been fooled. He had no proof of anything and Lambert must go free.

"You've fooled us," he said to Nance, sourly, yet with a kind of admiration too. "Through you, they got away with it. But I wouldn't try it again if I were you."

"Once is enough," answered the girl, laconically, as Lambert, set free, caught both her hands in his and wish perched in her car.

MacFee turned to the others, "You'd better drop this kind of thing," he said "I mean business." They saw the troopers by the horses, and nodded.

"Well, was about quit of it anyhow," said Bantry. "We've had all we want out here."

A loud laugh went up, and it was still ringing when there there burst into the group out of the trail, Abe Hawley, on foot.

He looked round the group savagely till his eyes rested on Nance and Lambert. I'm late in "the said in a hoarse voice. "My horse broke its leg cutting across to get here before her— He waved a hand toward Nance. "It's best stickin' to old trails, not tryin' new ones." His eyes were full of hate as he looked at Lambert. I'm keeping to old trails. I'm for goin' North, far up, where these two-dollar-a-day and hash-and-clothes people ain't come yet. He made a contemptuous gesture toward MacFee and his troopers. "I'm goin' North. I took a step forward and fixed his blood shot eyes on Nance. "I say I'm goin' North. You comin' with me, Nance?" He took of his cap to her.

"You said, 'Come back in an hour' Nance, and I come back, as I said I would," he went on. "You didn't stand to your word. I've come to get it. I'm goin' North, Nance, and I bin waitin' for four years for you to go with me. Are you comin'?"

His voice was quiet, but it had a choking kind of sound, and it struck strangely in the ears of all. MacFee came nearer.

"Are you comin' with me, Nance, dear?"

She reached a hand toward Lambert, and he took it, but she did not speak. Something in Abe's eyes overwhelmed her—something she had never seen before, and it seemed to stifle speech in her. Lambert spoke instead. "She's going East with me," he said "That's settled."

MacFee started. Then he caught Abe's arm. "Wait!" he said peremptorily. "Wait one minute."

There was something in his voice which held Abe back for the instant. "You say she is going East with you," MacFee said, sharply, to Lambert. "What for?" He fastened Lambert with his eyes, and Lambert quailed. "Have you told her you've got a wife—down East? I've got your history, Lambert. Have you told her that you've got a wife you married when you were at college—and as good a girl as ever lived?"

He was haggard his buckskins were torn; his hair was disheveled and he limped a little; but he was a massive and striking figure, and MacFee watched him closely, for there was that in his eyes which meant trouble.

It had come with terrible suddenness even to Lambert, and he was too dazed to make any reply. With rage and hate, Abe Hawley sprang toward Lambert, but the master of the troopers stepped between.

No one could tell who moved first or who first made the suggestion, for the minds of all were the same and the general purpose was instantaneous, but in the fraction of a minute Lambert, upon meanness, was on his hands and knees crawling to the riverside. Watchful but not interfering, the master of the troopers saw him set adrift in a canoe without a paddle, while he was pelted with mud from the shore.

The next morning at sunrise Abe Hawley and the girl he had waited for so long started on the North trail together. MacFee, master of the troopers and justice of peace handling over the marriage lines.

MCLAUGHLIN-BUICK MASTER SIX 24-45

Sit Behind the Wheel of this Master Six

At first glance, you will certainly appreciate the smart lines, the attractive finish and beautiful appointments of this McLaughlin-Buick.

You can't really know this fine car, however, until you have sat behind the wheel.

When you have felt the superabundant power; tested the speed and unusual riding comfort; enjoyed the ease of control, on all roads in all weathers, that is afforded by the tested four wheel brakes—not until then will you know all the value offered in this fine car.

From a schoolboy's essay on dogs and cats:—"The dog is the commonest of all animals. Its legs are four and one tail off sizes. Cats are very common in all large towns and cities, but dogs are more so. There is only three things wiser than the dog, which is ourselves, all monkeys, and all elephants. Don't tease cats, for firstly it wrong so to do, and 2nd cats have claws which is longer than people think. Cats have nine lives, but which is seldom required in this country because of Christianity."

"Old friends are best," quoth the king, as he slipped on his old shoes.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALBERTA IS NOT AS SERIOUS AS ELSEWHERE

"The unemployment problem in Alberta is not nearly so acute as in other provinces," declared the Hon. R. G. Reid, provincial treasurer on his return from the Dominion unemployment conference at Ottawa.

"The situation appears to be much more serious in the East, especially in Ontario and compared with the problem in Alberta I almost felt that the Alberta representatives had very little right to be present at the conference."

"Reports from the Eastern industrial centres showed that the conditions there are far worse than here."

"It was the feeling of the meeting at Ottawa that the situation should not be a matter for provincial and municipal authorities to overcome alone, but that the Dominion government should also assume some responsibility, and a resolution to that effect was put through. The Hon. James Murchuk Federal Minister of Labor, gave an assurance that this phase of the question would be considered by the Government in due course."

"Emphasis was placed in all the discussions at the conference upon the necessity of providing a larger amount of seasonal employment during the winter months, and it was pointed out that in the building trades particularly there is much work that can be done in the winter to good advantage, thus overcoming one of the main difficulties of what is otherwise a slack time."

PREMIER KING'S WESTERN TOUR

OTTAWA—Premier King's western tour opens at Port Arthur and Fort William on October 2, and meetings will be held all through the prairies and British Columbia, the tour ending at Cochrane, Ontario, on November 6.

He speaks at Saskatoon on October 7, Prince Albert, October 8, Edmonton, October 10, Lethbridge, October 20, Calgary, October 30 Medicine Hat, October 31, Moose Jaw, half hour stop on November 2, Regina, November 3. He will be accompanied by Hon. Mr. Carlin, H. B. McGivern, Senator Hayden.

PROPOSED RESEARCH LABORATORY FOR WEST

An intensive research laboratory, the largest in the west, for the purpose of studying and to discover, if possible, means of eradicating the menace, will be established in Manitoba. The project will, it is understood, include the erection of several large greenhouses for experimental purposes and a large research building.

It is not likely that the site will be at the Manitoba Agricultural college. About 25 acres would be devoted to the work according to proposed plans.

A report will be furnished by the committee in charge to the federal government at Ottawa and it is probable that definite announcement of the site will be made shortly. Rust research work has been carried on at the Manitoba Agricultural college for about five years, but on a somewhat limited scale. Saskatchewan also has a similar laboratory.

The proposed new laboratory, however would be on a much larger scale than at present established in the west

CANADIAN APPLES FOR FOLK AND FRIENDS IN THE OLD COUNTRY

This year's Christmas for our folks and friends across the sea can be made happy by a small remembrance from Canada of a box of our Canadian Apples, hand picked and packed; their luster and taste tell of our beautiful Summer Climate. Your grocer can fill such an order—the Canadian Express will transport and deliver by rapid express service, including refrigerator storage on steamer to any station in Great Britain or Ireland from Montreal, Que., and Quebec, June, up to November 15th and afterwards from Halifax, N.S., and St. John N.B., at a rate of Three Dollars per standard box of apples, not exceeding one cubic foot eight inches in measurement or over fifty pounds in weight. Consult any Canadian National Express Agent as to through express rate from your town.

"Now, boys," said the schoolmaster, "the word novelette means 'a short tale.' You may now write a short sentence containing the word."

A few minutes later he picked Johnny Brown's effort and read aloud: "Yesterday I saw a fox-terrier running down the street with a tin can tied to his novelette."

Tourist: "Tother. We've climbed to the top of the mountain to see this view and we've forgotten the glasses"

Scotch guide: "Och! Never mind, there's nobody about. We can just drink out o' the bottle."

LITTLE ADS DO GREAT WORK

ELEVENTH
of the series dealing with the establishment of the BANK OF MONTREAL at representative points in CANADA and elsewhere

THE PARIS subsidiary of the Bank of Montreal is situated in a quarter rich in historic interest.

From a lofty column in Place Vendôme the statue of Napoleon looks out upon an imposing square the construction of which began in 1686 under authority of Louis XIV.—a square which has witnessed many of the city's greatest demonstrations and which now mirrors the social and business life of Paris.

Here, in the heart of the capital of France, the Bank of Montreal in 1919 established a subsidiary office in the Ritz Hotel Building. In February, 1922, the business of this office had become so extensive that enlarged quarters were opened near by at No. 6 Place Vendôme.
